

Butterfield Named Bermuda's Bank Of The Year

Dec 08 2022

Butterfield has been named Bank of the Year 2022 in Bermuda by The Banker, an international financial affairs publication.

The Banker, owned by the Financial Times, has been the world's leading monthly journal of record for the banking industry for almost a century. Its awards programme aims to highlight industry excellence and marks out banks with strong management, sound business models and a prudent risk approach. Judges receive over 1,000 applications and select one bank from 120 countries based on performance, innovation, adding customer value and leadership in the community.

Michael Neff, Butterfield's Managing Director of Bermuda and International Wealth, said, "We are delighted Butterfield has been recognised as Bank of the Year in Bermuda for the 10th year running. This award reflects the effort and dedication our employees have put in throughout the year and it is an achievement we are proud of. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the team for their consistent hard work and to thank our clients for their valued loyalty. We continue to invest in our client experience and remain committed to supporting the wider community."

Earlier this year, Butterfield was also named Bermuda's Best Private Bank by The Banker/PWM and Global Finance magazine.
